Design annotation — Navigation: Use the same header across all six pages. Keep Najma's wordmark linked to Home. Show the five navigation labels in their existing order when they fit; otherwise use an md-icon-button opening an md-menu with linked md-menu-item entries. Mark the current page with aria-current. Keep the full labels readable at increased text sizes.

Online English lessons with a teacher you choose

Design annotation — Homepage opening: Use a left-aligned text-led hero. Keep the £20 / 55-minute line immediately above the actions. Make “See lessons and prices” the filled primary button and “Find a teacher” an outlined button. Give the organisational consultation a text-button treatment on its own line. Use an approved photograph only if it supports the introduction.

Najma is a teacher-led collective offering private online English lessons for adults. You can study regularly with a teacher you choose or book a lesson to prepare for a particular conversation or piece of work.

Our work connects English teaching with a commitment to solidarity and fair conditions for teachers. Alongside private lessons, we offer programmes for organisations and a free Solidarity Café where people can meet through conversation.

Private lessons: £20 for 55 minutes.

Meet Najma at the Solidarity Café

Design annotation — Café preview: Place this section immediately after the opening. Use a tonal surface with the next event details and one filled reservation action. Keep the free pilot status visible. If details or registration are pending, show the existing “Ask about the next Café” alternative. Link to the full Café page for participation information.

The Solidarity Café brings people together for an informal online conversation about solidarity and social change. A facilitator helps the discussion along, and you are welcome to join in or spend time listening.

The Café is free during the pilot and usually lasts 55–75 minutes. English is our shared language, with intermediate English (around B1 or above) recommended. You can attend before booking any lessons.

Lessons and prices

Design annotation — Lesson summary: Keep the standard private lesson prominent. Place the optional short lesson and introductory appointment beneath it as supporting text with their own links. Preserve the teacher-availability qualification beside each optional service. Reuse the price treatment from the Lessons and prices page.

Private lessons

Your private lessons can follow a longer-term interest or focus on something you are preparing for now. You and your teacher agree where to begin, whether that means improving everyday conversation or getting ready for a meeting. Book one lesson at a time and continue with the same teacher for as long as it suits you.

Some teachers also offer 25-minute lessons for £10. If you would like to meet a teacher first, look for a free 20-minute introductory appointment to discuss your English and ask about their lessons.

Keep learning with Najma

As your teacher gets to know you, lessons can build on what you have already learnt and adapt as your priorities change.

If you decide to learn with another Najma teacher, they can pick up from your earlier lessons so you can continue making progress.

English for your organisation

Design annotation — Organisation route: Use a full-width section with the programme explanation on the left and a compact pricing summary on the right at wide widths. Stack in reading order on small screens. Use “Arrange a free consultation” as its filled action and the programme page as a text link.

We offer English programmes for organisations involved in activism and solidarity, as well as broader business English and professional communication training. A programme might help your team explain a campaign to international partners or take a more active part in meetings.

A free consultation gives you time to discuss your organisation’s work with the teacher who would lead the programme. They will then prepare a written proposal for you to review.

Group sessions cost £10 per learner for 55 minutes, with at least four participants from your organisation. Private lessons cost £20 per learner for 55 minutes. Your proposal confirms the total fee and booking terms, and the lead teacher normally designs and teaches the programme.

A collective run by its teachers

Design annotation — Collective and continuity: Use open text sections for this explanation and “Keep learning with Najma”. Give the 80% allocation a title-level emphasis with the approval qualification nearby. Use one About link. Detailed allocation graphics belong on the About page.

Najma’s teachers have an equal say in how the collective runs and retain professional control over their teaching. This gives them room to choose methods and materials that suit the people they teach.

During the pilot, 80% of paid revenue goes to the teacher delivering the work. The remaining 20% supports the collective’s shared roles and includes a proposed contribution to Al Manar.

The proposed 5% contribution to Al Manar and the public relationship begin once Al Manar approves the arrangement. Revenue shares are calculated after refunds and before payment-processing charges.

Practical questions

Design annotation — Practical questions: Use the shared FAQ pattern: visible question headings followed by full answers, separated with md-divider. Keep cancellation information easy to scan. Make the level-check link visibly external and retain its account requirement beside it.

How do I book and join a lesson?

Choose an appointment through your teacher's profile and follow the booking instructions. Your private lesson is confirmed when payment is received. Your booking details include the meeting platform and joining link.

How can I check my English level?

The British Council's free online level test gives an approximate guide to your English through questions about grammar and vocabulary. You will need a free LearnEnglish account to take it. You can discuss the result with your teacher when you begin.

What happens if I need to cancel?

For private lessons, you can choose a full refund or one transfer to another available lesson with at least 24 hours' notice. With less notice, the fee remains payable. Your teacher may offer extra flexibility in exceptional circumstances. If your teacher cancels, you can choose a full refund or a transfer. Organisational programmes follow the terms in their approved proposal.

Who can see my learning record?

Your learning record helps teachers build on your earlier lessons. Access is limited to people who need it for teaching or learner support, including booking administration. Email info@najmacollective.org to ask about your information or request a correction or a restriction on access.

How can I ask a question or give feedback?

Shared web design specification — Google Material Design 3

These are internal design annotations for all six website pages. Labels beginning “Design annotation” describe implementation and stay out of published page copy. The current Google Doc governs the offer; its revised organisational pricing supersedes the earlier public-group model in Plan.txt.

Approved design system. Use Google Material Design 3 exclusively. Google’s @material/web is the sole UI component library. Exclude Tailwind and third-party component kits, including MUI, Bootstrap and shadcn/ui. Build the page structure with semantic HTML and plain CSS. Where the library lacks a ready-made layout element, compose its supported controls inside semantic containers styled to M3 guidance. Keep actual component names distinct from descriptive patterns such as “tonal surface”.

Colour and surfaces. Derive the theme from Najma’s approved brand colour using Google’s Material Theme Builder. Use --md-sys-color-* roles consistently. Pair primary with on-primary for filled actions. Use surface-container roles for grouped content and outline-variant for quiet dividers. Preserve suitable contrast in any supported theme. Final brand hues require an approved seed colour; avoid inventing a new brand palette.

Typography. Use Roboto with Material’s type roles. Use display-small for wide-screen page openings and headline-large at compact widths. Use headline-medium for section headings, title-large for profile and service titles, body-large for prose and label-large for button text. Keep HTML heading levels semantic. Target about 65 characters per text line. Load fonts with a system fallback and preserve readable content during loading.

Responsive layout. For this site, use a maximum content width of 1200 CSS px. Use 16 px compact-screen gutters and 24–32 px at larger widths. Set 24 px gaps between groups. Start with compact below 600 px, medium from 600–839 px and expanded from 840 px; adjust navigation earlier whenever the actual labels need more room. Use one content column on compact screens and two where the text fits comfortably. These dimensions are project layout choices.

Component behaviour. Use md-filled-button for a section’s principal action, md-outlined-button for a secondary action and md-text-button for lower-emphasis navigation. Use supported link behaviour for destination actions. Use md-filter-chip for filtering. Use md-outlined-text-field for forms. Use md-divider between repeated informational rows. Restrict icons to Google Material Symbols and provide names for icon-only controls. Keep paragraphs and static labels visually separate from interactive chips.

FAQs and navigation. Keep FAQ answers expanded in the pilot. Use a semantic navigation landmark and the same five destinations across pages. The small-screen menu uses supported Material Web menu components; retain their keyboard behaviour. Keep footer links readable in stacked groups on phones. Recruitment and privacy links appear when their destinations are ready.

Accessibility and feedback. Target 48 × 48 CSS px touch areas. Preserve visible keyboard focus and logical reading order. Provide a skip link and text alternatives for meaningful photographs. Check text contrast at 4.5:1 for normal text and 3:1 for large text; essential interface boundaries need 3:1. Verify reflow at 320 CSS px and 200% text zoom. Respect reduced-motion preferences. Express status and validation through text as well as colour.

Booking and forms. Preserve prices and durations at the handoff to a confirmed booking destination. Link out to a third-party calendar when its interface cannot conform to the site's M3-only rule. Every form needs an entry state, validation errors, a submitting state and persistent success or failure feedback. Announce status changes accessibly and retain entered data after recoverable errors. Keep the contact route available.

Photography and motion. Use approved photographs of actual participants in the collective where appropriate. Keep portraits consistently cropped and avoid text over faces. Retain the official Material shape and elevation treatment for controls. Prefer flat or low-elevation surfaces for prose. Use brief Material interaction feedback and respect reduced motion; omit autoplay and decorative carousels.

Implementation note. The official Material Web project currently identifies itself as being in maintenance mode. Pin and test the chosen release. Use supported components from that release and keep the approved M3-only restriction throughout implementation. The following official references define the library and theme conventions.

Revised offer and pilot-framework updates

The agreed offer below governs this website draft and supersedes the earlier pricing and public-group sections in Plan.txt. Carry the corresponding changes into Copy of Draft Pilot Framework.

Individual bookings: standard private lessons cost £20 for 55 minutes. Teachers may also offer 25-minute private lessons for £10 and a free 20-minute introductory appointment.

Organisational clients: groups are supplied by the client organisation. Each 55-minute group session costs £10 per learner and requires at least four learners. Private lessons cost £20 per learner for 55 minutes. A free consultation leads to a written proposal confirming the agreed sessions and total programme fee before teaching begins.

Teaching scope: organisational programmes include specialist English for advocacy and organising alongside business English and professional communication training.

Framework changes: remove the former public-group service and booking provisions. Remove its enrolment deadline and conditional-enrolment refund process. Retain the existing 24-hour cancellation policy for private lessons. Organisational programmes follow the cancellation and payment terms in their approved proposals.

Level guidance: use an external online level check for initial guidance. Teacher selection should focus on professional experience and teaching areas. Remove requirements for teacher profiles to list supported levels.

Solidarity Café: retain free attendance during the pilot. Sessions normally last 55–75 minutes, with B1 English or above recommended. The Café remains a facilitated community conversation.

Pilot review: distinguish private lesson bookings from organisational programme activity. Confirm the maximum organisational class size and how proposals handle changes to agreed participant numbers. The existing revenue allocation and Al Manar approval condition continue to apply.

Editorial standard for Najma public copy

Write for an adult considering English lessons. Use familiar language and connected paragraphs that answer the reader's questions. Explain educational benefits through recognisable situations while keeping solidarity visible in the people and work Najma supports.

Use familiar English teaching collocations. Avoid stock phrases such as “develop the English you need”, “support your goals”, “shape learning around” and “navigate situations”. If a broad phrase such as “build confidence” appears, follow it with a concrete situation.

Vary sentence length according to the meaning. Use linking words when they help an explanation develop naturally, and allow a sentence to carry a connected thought. Read the copy aloud to catch abrupt transitions and awkward phrasing.

Calls to action should say exactly what happens next. Use direct labels such as “Find a teacher”, “Arrange a free consultation” and “Reserve a free place”.

Aim for language that readers around B1 can follow, while respecting their experience and intelligence. Explain essential specialist terms in context and avoid simplifying the prose into a succession of disconnected statements.

Use major English teaching providers as benchmarks for navigation, pricing, trust signals and booking journeys. Use plain-English content design and strong education writing as the benchmark for sentence-level style.

Avoid slogan chains, repeated sentence frames and polished three-part constructions that make the copy sound rehearsed. Read every paragraph aloud before publication.

Teachers: add two or three confirmed profiles with approved photographs, drawn from the planned cohort of about four teachers. Verify each person's qualifications and relevant experience. Ask them to approve their biography and the description of any work with Palestinian learners. Connect each profile to the correct booking calendar.

Café: confirm the event details and registration destination before showing "Reserve a free place". If a session is still being arranged, replace the event card and reservation action with an accurate status and "Ask about the next Café", linked to info@najmacollective.org. Confirm the pilot start and end dates.

Lesson details: individual learners book private lessons. Agree each organisational programme's maximum group size in its proposal, with a minimum of four learners. Confirm which IELTS components and test versions each teacher supports.

Booking and learning: check that the calendar, payment confirmation and joining instructions match each advertised service. Prepare the privacy notice from the actual arrangements for learner information before bookings or Café registration open. Confirm the shared-record process so the continuity and access wording accurately describes what Najma can provide.

Links: use one teacher finder for "Find a teacher" and the teaching-area buttons. "Find a short lesson" and "Find a free introductory appointment" should show teachers offering those options. Connect consultation buttons to the agreed enquiry route and Café reservations to the confirmed event. Contact links use info@najmacollective.org. Add the privacy and recruitment routes when their pages and processes are ready.

About page: show the full pilot allocation. Teaching receives 80%. Operations receives 5%. Co-administration receives 5%. Café facilitation receives 5%. The proposed Al Manar contribution is 5%. Calculate these shares after refunds and before processing charges. Confirm Al Manar's public name and approval before presenting the relationship as established.

£20 for 55 minutes

Live online · 55 minutes · one learner · choose your teacher · book one lesson at a time

One-to-one lessons give you time to concentrate on your English with your teacher’s full attention. You might want to speak more easily in everyday life or prepare for a university or work task. Your teacher will help you decide where to begin and adjust the lessons as you progress.

Your fee covers 55 minutes of live teaching and feedback on the English you practise together. Your teacher may use or share materials during the lesson, and you will leave with a clearer idea of what to practise next.

These describe possible lesson content; keep them visually distinct from the bookable duration options above. Preserve the one shared teacher-finder action.

Your teacher can help you study English more generally or concentrate on one of the areas below. Their profile explains the experience they bring to that work.

General English

Improve your fluency through conversation about everyday life and topics that interest you. As you speak, your teacher can help you express your meaning more clearly and understand language that feels unfamiliar. Reading and writing can also form part of your lessons.

Business and professional English

Practise communicating clearly in the situations you encounter at work. You could rehearse a presentation and the questions that follow it, or work with your teacher on the wording and tone of an email. Lessons can also provide regular practice for meetings and conversations with colleagues.

Academic English

Develop the English you use in university study, with guidance on academic writing and discussion. Your teacher can help you organise an argument or explain your research, then give you opportunities to practise contributing to a seminar or presenting your work.

IELTS preparation

Prepare for IELTS speaking and writing through practice with the test tasks. Feedback linked to the assessment criteria will help you identify what to improve and return to it in later lessons. Each teacher's profile states which test versions and components they cover.

English for advocacy and organising

Work on the English you use in advocacy and organising, whether you are explaining an issue to partners or preparing to speak in public. You can develop a briefing or rehearse a campaign discussion with your teacher, paying attention to how your message will be understood by different audiences.

Check your English level

Design annotation — External level check: Use a low-emphasis tonal section with an external-link Material Symbol and a descriptive text link. Keep “approximate guide” and the free-account requirement visible. Booking remains directly accessible elsewhere on the page.

The British Council’s free online level test gives an approximate guide to your English through questions about grammar and vocabulary. You will need a free LearnEnglish account to take it. You can discuss the result with your teacher when you begin.

How lessons connect over time

Design annotation — Learning continuity and fee allocation: Keep both explanatory sections as readable prose with a 65-character line-length target. Emphasise the 80% figure modestly and link the full allocation to About Najma. Avoid adding a learner dashboard or progress widget to this public page.

Regular lessons give your teacher time to understand how you learn and what you want to achieve. Together you can return to difficult areas and recognise the progress you make.

As your English develops, the focus of your lessons can change with it. You might spend several sessions on an area that needs attention or bring a new task when one arises.

If you choose another Najma teacher, they can build on what you have already studied so that your learning continues across the change.

How your lesson fee supports Najma

Najma keeps shared costs low so that private lessons can remain affordable. During the pilot, 80% of paid revenue is allocated to the teacher delivering the work. The remaining 20% funds shared roles and includes a proposed contribution to Al Manar.

Teachers retain professional control over their methods and materials. The About page explains the full allocation of fees and the proposed relationship with Al Manar.

Learning with your organisation

Design annotation — Other routes: Treat the organisation offer and following Café section as separate tonal sections with their existing destination actions. Keep organisational prices expressed per learner. The Café retains its free pilot label and recommended level. Use the same visual treatment as their dedicated pages.

Group sessions: £10 per learner for 55 minutes, with a minimum of four learners. Private lessons: £20 per learner for 55 minutes.

Najma offers specialist English teaching for advocacy and organising alongside business English and professional communication training. Your organisation supplies the participant group, or you can arrange private lessons for individual staff or members. After a free consultation, a lead teacher prepares a written proposal covering the programme and its booking terms.

Your proposal confirms the number of learners and sessions, together with the total programme fee, before teaching begins. Your lead teacher will normally design and deliver the programme.

Practical questions

Design annotation — Questions and final action: Use visible FAQ answers with dividers. Keep refund and confirmation conditions in ordinary readable body text. Finish with the existing “Find a teacher” filled button. Follow with the shared footer.

What does my lesson fee include?

A £20 private lesson includes 55 minutes of live teaching and feedback on your English, with guidance on what to practise next. Your teacher may use or share materials during the session. Check the booking description for short lessons; organisational programmes follow their approved proposal.

How do I join an online lesson?

Your booking details include the platform and joining link. Before the lesson, check that you can use the platform on your device and that your internet connection is working.

When is my booking confirmed?

Your private lesson is confirmed when payment is received. Organisational programmes follow the payment arrangements in their approved proposal.

Can I cancel or change my booking?

For private lessons, you can choose a full refund or one transfer to another available lesson with at least 24 hours' notice. With less notice, the fee remains payable. Your teacher may offer extra flexibility in exceptional circumstances. Organisational programmes follow the terms in their approved proposal.

What happens if my teacher cancels?

You can choose a full refund or a transfer. Your teacher arranges this through the account that received your payment.

Who can see my learning record?

Your learning record helps teachers build on your earlier lessons. Access is limited to people who need it for teaching or learner support, including booking administration. Email info@najmacollective.org to ask about your information or request a correction or a restriction on access.

How can I ask a question or raise a concern?

Teacher evidence is a launch-critical requirement. Add two or three confirmed profiles with approved photographs. Verify qualifications, relevant teaching experience and available services. Connect every card to the correct booking calendar. Use testimonials only with permission and identify earlier teaching outside Najma where relevant.

Keep the £20 private-lesson price beside the main action. The public page should explain what the fee includes and show the 80% delivery allocation later on the page as part of Najma's transparent low-overhead model.

Use one teacher finder with the same teaching-area labels shown on this page. Display a filter only when a confirmed teacher offers that area. Short lessons and free introductory appointments should lead to teachers who offer those options.

Organisational groups are arranged through a consultation and written proposal. Confirm the participant numbers and maximum class size in the proposal. Apply the agreed programme payment and cancellation terms.

Booking checks: confirm any included materials or follow-up with each teacher. Test the advertised price and duration against the calendar and payment confirmation, then check the joining instructions. "Booking and cancellations" should lead to the published terms; the 24-hour private-lesson policy and proposal-based organisational terms must agree with this copy.

Organisational programmes: decide whether the proposal template will include a light end-of-programme review. Add progress or impact reporting to public copy once the operating framework supports it.

Choosing a teacher

Design annotation — Choosing and continuing: Use plain text sections with the shared body typography. Keep the teacher's qualifications and teaching areas available before the calendar opens. Reuse confirmed profile data across the site so changes propagate consistently.

A teacher's profile can help you decide whether their experience and approach fit what you are looking for. If you are preparing for an exam or working on academic writing, for example, look for relevant teaching experience in that area.

Continuity as you learn

Working with the same teacher over time allows your lessons to develop as they get to know you. You can revisit earlier learning and change the focus as your English improves.

If your schedule or priorities change, you can book another available Najma teacher. They can build on your previous lessons so your learning continues through the change.

See lessons and prices

Meet a teacher before you book

Design annotation — Appointment availability: The free-appointment action opens this finder with the relevant service filter applied. Show a clear empty-result message and an md-text-button to clear filters when there are no matches. A teacher with no available slots retains a readable profile and an accurate availability message.

A free 20-minute introductory appointment gives you time to ask about a teacher's lessons and discuss what you would like to achieve. Check their profile to see whether they offer one.

Frequently asked questions

Design annotation — FAQ and booking handoff: Use visible questions with md-divider. At the calendar handoff keep the teacher's name and selected service clear. Display the exact duration and price before payment. Use a normal destination link for an external booking provider to keep third-party interface styling outside the Najma page.

Do all Najma teachers offer the same lessons?

Each teacher's profile explains their teaching areas and available private lesson options. Short lessons and free introductory appointments are available where the teacher offers them.

Do private lessons cost the same with every teacher?

Yes. Standard private lessons cost £20 for 55 minutes during the pilot. A 25-minute lesson costs £10 where a teacher offers it.

Can I book lessons with more than one teacher?

Yes. You can continue with one teacher or book another available teacher when you want a different focus or appointment time. Your new teacher can build on what you have already studied.

How do I know a teacher's qualifications are accurate?

Najma checks the qualifications and relevant experience shown on each published profile. Where a qualification may be unfamiliar, the profile explains it in plain English.

Publication details to confirm

Publish only confirmed teachers with approved photographs. Verify their qualifications and relevant teaching experience, including any description of teaching in demanding conditions.

Each teacher should approve their own biography. Check that their available services and calendar match the advertised prices and durations.

Keep the same factual fields across all profiles so learners can compare teachers easily. Let the wording around those fields sound individual and human.

First-person profile prompt for teachers: introduce your teaching in a short paragraph that sounds like you. Explain how your experience shapes your lessons and how you help learners make progress. Include a concrete example of the work you enjoy teaching, using your own phrasing.

Edit first-person statements lightly. Correct clear errors and remove repetition while preserving the teacher's vocabulary, rhythm and personality.

Show a teaching-area filter only when at least one confirmed teacher offers that area. For IELTS, confirm the components and test versions each teacher supports.

Use testimonials only with permission. Identify teaching experience gained outside Najma where that context matters.

Keep the £20 private-lesson price and the route to booking near the top. The finder should stay simple for the pilot team and remain easy to expand later.

English programmes for organisations

Design annotation — Organisation opening: Use one filled “Arrange a free consultation” action. Set the introductory text at a comfortable reading width. Place the per-learner price statement in a secondary tonal surface beside the introduction on wide screens and below it on compact screens. Keep the four-person minimum visible.

English for international work and solidarity.

Najma offers online English teaching for organisations, with a particular focus on activism and solidarity work. We teach English for advocacy and organising alongside business English and professional communication skills. Your staff or members can learn together as a group or take private lessons.

Start with a free consultation to discuss how your organisation uses English and what participants would like to improve. The teacher who would lead the programme will then prepare a written proposal for you to review.

Group sessions cost £10 per learner for 55 minutes, with a minimum of four learners per class. Private lessons cost £20 per learner for 55 minutes.

Arrange a free consultation

What could your group work on?

Design annotation — Programme themes: Use the five themes as open sections in a two-column grid, switching to one column on compact screens. Give advocacy and campaign work the same heading hierarchy as the other themes. Treat these as examples for discussion during the consultation.

Meetings and international partnerships

Help your team take part in meetings with international partners. Participants can practise explaining their work and responding to colleagues, with time to explore how to ask for clarification when a discussion becomes difficult to follow.

Presentations and public speaking

Prepare for an upcoming talk or public presentation with a teacher's guidance. Participants can work on how to explain their ideas to an audience, then rehearse their delivery and practise answering questions.

Reports, emails and briefings

Work on the English your organisation uses in writing. Participants might revise a report so that its argument is easier to follow or practise writing emails with an appropriate tone. Lessons can use examples from their own work.

Advocacy and campaign work

Specialist English classes can help activists explain their campaigns to a wider audience. Participants might prepare a briefing for international partners or rehearse a contribution to a campaign meeting. The teaching focuses on expressing the issues clearly and responding to questions about them.

General English for staff or members

For staff or members who would like to improve their English more generally, a programme can provide regular speaking and listening practice. Reading and writing can also form part of the teaching, according to the group's needs.

How it works

Design annotation — Consultation sequence: Use a four-item semantic ordered list with md-divider. Keep proposal approval visibly before the start of teaching. Repeat the same consultation destination at the end of the sequence. Avoid adding an immediate paid checkout to this journey.

1. Talk to a lead teacher

Tell the lead teacher who will take part and how people use English in your organisation. If there is a particular task you want to prepare for, you can discuss it during the consultation.

2. Review the proposal

Your written proposal explains what the programme will cover and how the sessions will be delivered. It also confirms the total fee and payment schedule, together with the cancellation terms, so you can review the arrangement before approving it.

3. Start the programme

Your organisation brings together the participants, while the lead teacher usually designs and teaches the programme. Suitable examples from your work can help make the lessons relevant to the situations people encounter.

4. Adjust later sessions

As the programme develops, the teacher can adjust later sessions in response to participants' progress and feedback. Any larger change to the scope or number of sessions will be agreed with you first, including any effect on the fee.

Arrange a free consultation

Example programme

Design annotation — Example programme: Use one M3 tonal surface carrying an explicit "Example programme" label. Keep the six-person / four-session / £240 example together. Present the four sessions as a vertical list with their existing descriptions. Preserve the distinction between an illustration and the visitor's eventual agreed proposal.

English for international meetings

This example shows how a group could prepare for meetings with international partners over four 55-minute sessions. For six participants, the teaching would cost £240 in total at £10 per person per session.

Who it is for

Six staff or volunteers who regularly join meetings with partner organisations.

Aim

Speak in meetings and explain current projects clearly.

Session 1

Introduce the organisation and explain current work.

Session 2

Practise giving a project update and responding to colleagues' contributions.

Session 3

Practise asking follow-up questions and checking that you have understood other speakers.

Session 4

Bring the earlier work together in a practice meeting and receive feedback from the teacher.

Who we work with

We welcome enquiries from organisations involved in solidarity and public-interest work. This includes trade unions and campaign groups, as well as charities and community organisations. We can discuss specialist advocacy classes or English teaching for your organisation's wider professional work.

One lead teacher from start to finish

Your lead teacher will usually stay with the programme from the initial consultation through to the final session. This gives you a consistent point of contact and allows the teaching to build on what participants have already covered.

Pricing

Design annotation — Pricing: Use clear labelled rows for group and private teaching. Emphasise the per-learner unit beside the price and duration. Keep the six-person £60 example directly below. Leave the quotation explanation visible, including separately agreed additional work. A calculator is unnecessary for this pilot.

Group sessions cost £10 per learner for 55 minutes, with a minimum of four learners per class. Private lessons cost £20 per learner for 55 minutes.

Your programme fee is calculated from the number of learners and sessions agreed in the proposal. For example, a group of six costs £60 per 55-minute session. The proposal confirms the total fee and payment schedule before teaching begins. Any additional work is quoted separately and agreed before it begins.

Who teaches organisational programmes?

Design annotation — Organisation teachers: Reuse the shared portrait and profile styling. Show relevant organisational teaching experience in the preview. Each teacher's name links to their full profile. Keep the page's main conversion action focused on arranging the consultation.

Your programme will be led by a Najma teacher whose experience is relevant to the work you want to cover. The profiles below explain each teacher's qualifications and specialist background.

How Najma's model works

Najma is a teacher-led collective. During the pilot, 80% of paid Najma revenue goes to the teacher delivering the work. The remaining 20% supports shared administration, Café facilitation and the proposed contribution to Al Manar.

About Najma

Frequently asked questions

Design annotation — Programme questions: Use visible answers with dividers. Keep the organisation-supplied group requirement and proposal-based cancellation terms easy to find. Preserve the existing maximum-class-size wording until it is agreed in a proposal.

How much does a programme cost?

Group sessions cost £10 per learner for 55 minutes, with a minimum of four learners per class. Private lessons cost £20 per learner for 55 minutes. Your proposal confirms the number of sessions and total programme fee before teaching begins.

How many people can take part?

Organisational group classes have a minimum of four learners. Your organisation supplies the group, and the lead teacher agrees the maximum class size with you during the consultation. Private lessons are also available for individual staff or members.

Can you work with different English levels?

A group can include different levels of English when everyone can take part in the planned activities. Your lead teacher will help you decide whether people would benefit from learning together or from separate groups or private lessons.

How long does a programme last?

The number of sessions depends on the group's goals and the time available. Your teacher will recommend a programme length during the consultation, and the proposal will confirm the arrangement.

Can we use examples from our own work?

Yes. You can agree suitable material with the lead teacher so that the lessons relate to your organisation's work. Access to confidential information is limited to the lead teacher and the Najma role-holders who need it for coordination.

What happens if we need to change or cancel a session?

The proposal sets out the cancellation and rescheduling terms. You can review these before approving the programme.

Discuss a programme for your organisation

Design annotation — Consultation form: Route every consultation button to the same short form. Use md-outlined-text-field for the organisation and contact details. Add the likely group size and communication needs, with an optional message field. Keep persistent labels and use supporting text for errors. Submit with md-filled-button. Preserve entries after a failure and show a persistent confirmation after success. Keep the existing email route beside the form.

Consultation route: connect every “Arrange a free consultation” button to the same agreed destination. A short form should ask for the organisation’s name and contact details, then the likely group size and what participants use English for. Include an optional message field. Use info@najmacollective.org for questions.

Teacher evidence: publish only confirmed teachers who can lead organisational programmes. Verify their qualifications and relevant experience. Connect each featured teacher to their profile.

Programme scope: organisational groups require at least four learners supplied by the client. Confirm the maximum class size in each proposal and agree what happens if participant numbers change. Private lessons can be arranged for individual staff or members. Check that the proposal template uses the per-learner prices shown on this page.

Pricing: show £10 per learner for each 55-minute organisational group session, with a minimum of four learners. Show £20 per learner for each 55-minute private lesson. Calculate the programme total from the agreed participant numbers and sessions. Any additional work requires a separate quotation approved before it begins.

Benchmark feature: leading corporate ELT providers commonly use a formal training-needs analysis or level assessment before teaching. Najma already covers communication needs in the consultation. Add a simple level-check process later if the pilot team can support it consistently.

Benchmark feature: British Council, International House and the London School of English give organisations clearer progress or reporting information. Najma can add a light end-of-programme review after an agreed process has been tested. Keep formal reporting claims off the public page until that process exists.

Benchmark feature: major providers use client logos, testimonials and case studies as trust signals. Add one short organisational case study or testimonial after the pilot when permission is available. Focus on the communication need, the programme and the outcome.

Benchmark feature: several providers make teacher quality highly visible. Keep the teacher cards on this page. Show verified qualifications and relevant organisational or professional English experience.

Benchmark feature: the strongest pages repeat one clear consultation action and keep the enquiry form low-friction. Use “Arrange a free consultation” as the main action throughout the page.

Confidentiality: restrict organisational client information to the lead teacher and Najma role-holders who require it for coordination. Any public account of the work requires anonymisation or the client’s permission.

Free online conversations about solidarity and social change.

The Solidarity Café brings together adults who care about solidarity and social change. You are welcome whether you already take part in activism or community work, or would like to meet people and explore these interests.

Sessions offer time to talk about issues that matter to the group, with a facilitator helping the conversation along. We use English as our shared language, and you are welcome to listen as well as speak.

What happens in a session?

Design annotation — Participation and topics: Use comfortable text sections with short headings. Leave the freedom to listen and take a break visible. Avoid mandatory microphone or camera icons that imply participation requirements. Use only confirmed event-specific access information.

A facilitator hosts the conversation and helps everyone find space to take part. The discussion develops around the session topic and the experiences people choose to share, so there is room to explore different perspectives and ask questions.

You decide how much you would like to contribute. You can listen while you get to know the group, join the discussion when you feel ready or take a break whenever you need one.

What might we talk about?

Topics come from the questions people encounter in solidarity and community work. We might explore how a group works through disagreement or what helps new people feel welcome.

Another conversation could consider how people stay involved when the work becomes demanding.

Meet the facilitator

Design annotation — Facilitator profile: Use the same portrait proportions as teacher profiles. Lead with the facilitator's name and Café role. Present the approved biography in a readable paragraph. Keep visual emphasis on hosting the community conversation.

English in the Café

Design annotation — Language guidance: Give the B1 explanation a restrained surface treatment. Keep the link to English lessons as a secondary text action. Preserve the Café's informal purpose in the section immediately above.

English allows people from different language backgrounds to join the same conversation. Intermediate English, around B1 or above, is recommended: you should be able to follow the main points of a discussion and explain your ideas.

The Café offers informal conversation about solidarity and social change. If you would like English teaching with individual language feedback, you can explore Najma's private lessons. Explore Najma lessons and teachers

Practical questions

Design annotation — Practical questions: Use visible FAQ answers with dividers. Keep the recording statement and access-adjustment route readable before registration. Use the shared external-link treatment for any platform guidance.

Do I have to speak?

You are welcome to listen throughout a session or join in when you feel ready. There is space for both ways of taking part.

Is the Café therapy?

The Café is an informal community discussion, with the facilitator helping people take part. Counselling and psychotherapy fall outside the scope of the sessions.

Are sessions recorded?

Sessions are usually unrecorded. Any exception requires clear agreement from everyone taking part.

Can I ask for an access adjustment?

You can tell us about access needs when you register, or email info@najmacollective.org beforehand. Each event listing will explain the access options available for that session.

Design annotation — Registration: Use a short form with Material Web labelled text fields for the contact details needed to arrange attendance. Session design: agree a topic and a flexible approach with the facilitator. The public introduction should explain the experience of taking part. Add details about particular activities only when they are confirmed for that event.

Facilitator profile: lead with the Solidarity Café role. Add an approved photograph and a short biography. Verify any professional title or qualification before publication. If psychotherapy appears, present it as background rather than the organising language of the Café.

Topics: choose concrete questions about solidarity and social change. Questions can address disagreement, participation, belonging or staying involved over time. Keep campaign training and advocacy instruction within services led by someone with suitable experience.

Language: write for people around B1 and above using familiar words and connected paragraphs. Vary sentence length so the explanation sounds natural. Describe the conversation people can expect and avoid broad promises about wellbeing.

Participation: describe behaviour directly. Ask people to speak from their own experience. Let others decide what they share. Give other people time to speak. Allow people to stay quiet, step away or leave.

Boundaries: describe the Café once as a facilitated community conversation. Keep English teaching separate from the Café. Keep psychotherapy, counselling and clinical support separate from the facilitator’s Café role. Repeat the clinical boundary once in the FAQ.

Registration and access: keep the form short and collect the contact details needed to arrange attendance. Include a way to request an access adjustment. Confirm the available captions and chat options, together with camera choices. Link the completed privacy notice from the form before registration opens.

Recording: sessions should usually remain unrecorded. Any exception requires clear agreement from every participant before recording begins.

Pilot learning: track attendance, repeat attendance and movement into paid Najma services. A short optional follow-up can ask whether participants could take part in the way they wanted.

Page architecture: keep the event at the centre of the page. The Café is Najma’s community and relationship-building activity. Paid lessons and organisational programmes are the routes for structured English teaching.

A teacher-led collective for online English lessons

Najma is a teacher-led collective offering online English lessons for adults and organisations. We welcome anyone who would like to study with us, while maintaining a particular connection with people involved in solidarity and social change.

Our purpose is to make good English teaching affordable while creating paid work that teachers have a direct say in shaping. Najma grew from relationships formed through Palestinian education, and those relationships continue to inform the collective.

Find a teacher · See lessons and prices

Where Najma came from

Design annotation — Origin and relationships: Give Noor Community and Al Manar their own subheadings within one reading column. Use approved imagery only with clear context. Keep Najma’s separate status visible. Place the proposed contribution and approval condition together. Publish external organisation links once their destinations are confirmed.

The teachers who began Najma had worked together through Noor Community with Palestinian learners and educators. They created Najma as a separate project for paid English teaching, with its own booking arrangements and shared decisions.

Noor Community

Noor Community began in 2024 as a volunteer-led education initiative for Palestinians in Gaza and the West Bank. Its online English work brought together the teacher network from which Najma’s first cohort is being formed.

Najma operates separately from Noor. During the pilot, about four teachers from that network will take part in Najma.

Link: [Learn more about Noor Community]

Al Manar Society for Culture & Creativity

Al Manar Society for Culture & Creativity is an independent Palestinian organisation based in Aida refugee camp in Bethlehem. It works with youth, women and children through education, community activity and programmes that support participation in public life.

Al Manar’s work also includes English-language education for learners in Gaza and the West Bank. This forms part of the wider Palestinian-led educational work connected with Najma’s origins.

During the pilot, Najma proposes to allocate 5% of revenue from paid services to Al Manar. The contribution and public relationship will begin once Al Manar approves the arrangement.

A collective shaped by its teachers

Design annotation — Governance and learning: Keep these explanations as open prose with consistent H2 headings. Use spacing and occasional md-divider to organise the content. Avoid decorative badges that imply accreditation or legal status.

During the pilot, each participating teacher has one vote on shared decisions, which are agreed by a simple majority.

Teachers decide which services they offer and retain professional control over their teaching.

They choose their own methods and materials within the shared pilot prices and booking terms.

How we approach learning

You and your teacher decide what you want from your lessons. You may want to improve your English over time or prepare for something more immediate, such as a university assignment or an important meeting. The teaching can develop as your interests and priorities change.

Each teacher draws on their experience to choose activities and materials that suit the work you have agreed together. Their feedback helps you understand what you are doing well and where further practice would be useful.

As you continue, later lessons can build on the progress you have made. You can stay with the same teacher or book another Najma teacher when your schedule or interests change, while keeping a connection with your earlier learning.

What Najma offers

Design annotation — Services: Use three M3 tonal sections for private lessons, organisational programmes and the Café. Keep each section's action attached to its own text. Stack the sections on compact screens. Reuse the same pricing and free-pilot labels used on the dedicated pages.

You can book private English lessons for yourself or arrange a programme for your organisation.

The Solidarity Café offers another way to meet Najma through conversations about solidarity and social change, with free attendance during the pilot.

Private lessons

Work individually with a teacher on the English you use in everyday life or in your studies and work. Specialist lessons, including IELTS preparation, are available through teachers with relevant experience.

Programmes for organisations

Start with a free consultation about how your staff or members use English. Programmes can include specialist English for advocacy and organising as well as business English and professional communication training. Group sessions cost £10 per learner for 55 minutes, with a minimum of four learners. Private lessons cost £20 per learner for 55 minutes.

The Café is free during the pilot. Join an online conversation about solidarity and social change, usually lasting 55–75 minutes. Intermediate English, around B1 or above, is recommended. See lessons and prices · For organisations · Explore the Solidarity Café

Where Najma's income goes

Design annotation — Revenue graphic: Render the requested horizontal allocation bar with semantic HTML and CSS using M3 colour roles. Set widths to 80%, 5%, 5%, 5% and 5%. Place a complete labelled text breakdown below it so narrow segments need no tiny labels. Keep the Al Manar share explicitly proposed and repeat its approval condition beside the graphic. Preserve the after-refunds / before-processing-charges basis. Use a static graphic with an accessible text equivalent; a progress component would imply a different meaning.

During the pilot, 80% of revenue from each paid Najma service goes to the teacher or lead teacher delivering it. Four 5% shares support operations, co-administration, Solidarity Café facilitation and the proposed contribution to Al Manar.

80% — Teaching or programme delivery

5% — Operations

5% — Co-administration

5% — Solidarity Café facilitation

5% — Proposed contribution to Al Manar Society for Culture & Creativity

These shares are calculated after refunds and before payment-processing charges. The person whose account receives the payment covers those charges.

Starting small

Design annotation — Pilot: Use a modest secondary surface for the three-month pilot explanation. Keep the approximately four-teacher scale visible. Present the six-week and final reviews as simple text milestones. Add calendar dates only when confirmed.

Najma's pilot is designed to run for three months with about four teachers. Working on this scale gives the collective time to try the arrangements and learn from the people taking part.

We will review the pilot after six weeks and again at the end. The reviews will consider private lesson bookings and teacher income alongside organisational programmes. Café attendance and participants' feedback will also inform the discussion, including any concerns or complaints.

The final review will help the collective decide what to change before making longer-term arrangements.

The people behind Najma

Design annotation — People: Use compact profile previews with the shared portrait crop and named links. Keep the teacher group and Café facilitator visibly identified by role. Present Operations and Co-administration as short role descriptions with approved names when available. Link detailed teaching biographies to the Teachers page.

Noor Community: confirm the public description with Noor before publication. Add one link to Noor's current public website or profile. Keep the relationship clear: Najma operates separately and the initial Najma cohort draws from the Noor teaching network.

Al Manar: confirm the organisation's public name and description directly with them, together with the relationship wording and public link. Keep the 5% contribution proposed until approval is received. Agree how that share will be handled before approval and reflect the decision in the pilot framework.

Organisational status: add a concise public description of Najma's organisational and legal form once the arrangement is agreed. Keep this explanation brief and place it in the About page or footer where visitors can find it easily.

People: add approved photographs and short biographies for the participating teachers and Café facilitator. Use detailed teacher biographies on the Teachers page. Keep the About page focused on who the people are and how their roles relate to Najma.

Revenue graphic: use one horizontal allocation bar with an accessible text equivalent. Make the 80% teaching share visibly dominant and divide the remaining 20% into four equal shares for operations, co-administration, Café facilitation and the proposed Al Manar contribution.

Calculate these shares after refunds and before payment-processing charges.

Pilot: keep the three-month duration and approximately four-teacher scale visible. Describe the six-week and final reviews in plain language. Longer-term arrangements will follow the final pilot review.

Benchmark application: lead with a clear organisational identity and purpose. Give the origin story substantial space. Make the teacher-led model and educational approach concrete. Use verified teacher information, transparent pricing, the revenue allocation and the defined pilot as Najma's main trust signals.

Style: use a warm and straightforward voice, with connected explanations and concrete examples. Vary sentence length and read the copy aloud to check its flow. Keep detailed governance terminology in the pilot framework.

Page architecture: keep the sequence as identity and purpose, origin story, teacher-led model, learning approach, services, revenue transparency, pilot status, people and final calls to action. External factual sources used in the origin section should be checked immediately before publication. Confirm final organisational descriptions and public links with Noor and Al Manar.
